

Gun Violence Prevention Challenge Summit & Hack-a-thon

April 13 – 15, 2018 | Boston, Massachusetts

Mary Vriniotis, MS is a research consultant for the Harvard Injury Control Research Center (HICRC) at the Harvard Chan School of Public Health. She has spent over a decade in various positions at HICRC and the Harvard Youth Violence Prevention Center, managing firearm research projects and serving as their communications liaison during the aftermath of the Newtown and Parkland shootings. She designed and implemented the first regional victimization survey in the Caribbean (subsequently expanded across Latin America) for the Inter-American Development Bank. In 2009 she became an active member of the New Hampshire Firearm Safety Coalition, where she spent two years interviewing firearm dealers about strategies to reduce firearm suicide. She was the Project Manager for the Boston Data Project and the Means Matter Campaign, and recently managed a randomized controlled trial on lethal means counseling in eight hospitals.
